Lightroom also has a new mode called Photo Size, which serves as an alternative to the Crop Screen mode, with which you can adjust cropping options and preview the cropped image. All applications are designed around the experience of snapping images, processing them and then printing, editing and saving the edited photos, from helping to the advancement of technology that enables us to accomplish these tasks. I like the apps in the Adobe Creative Cloud over the cameras and smartphones themselves because of the ease of use, WiFi/Internet based storage and the ability to seamlessly move content from device to another. For example, I can copy a photo to my laptop to edit it, and my creativity is not limited by the capacity of my camera or phone. I can also take a copy of a photo to a photoshop.com cloud service. A photo can be edited anywhere from a one-touch editing to an intricate digital masterpiece. The multi-platform access means that I can show a friend the moment they like my photo and even send them a link so they can check the photo out themselves. All you need to do is download the app from the App Store, fill in your credentials and start taking snapshots. If you want to change your design, you can take a screen shot of the page and copy it into an email and send it to your designer.

Adobe Sensei and AI enable Photoshop to perform intelligent actions directly from the desktop. The new AI actions enable users to remove objects or replace them in one click, quickly and easily, in any type of content. AI-powered web-based technology also gives users more context around their images, so they may see relevant information -- such as who is currently working on the image -- more intuitively within the web browser. This intelligent image management platform helps users to seamlessly share their projects across browsers, other Adobe applications and channels, while providing them with real-time support whenever they need it. The release of Share for Review beta is the first step in Adobe's plan to continue building on the platform with subscription services in the works. The Share for Review beta allows Photoshop users to share their projects for review via a hosted, invite-only interface, which allows users to see a proof of concept of how different browsers and user experiences respond to different edits. As users receive faster responses and are able to get live feedback when they adjust an edit, they will be more likely to leave the browser without making changes. "We're excited to bring high quality web-based editing to the Photoshop community," said Christopher Lau, senior vice president of product management, Adobe Photoshop. "Share for Review is a great way to quickly share and refine your creative projects in web browsers, instantaneously, without having to leave Photoshop to access the shared view."
